Thus an observer on a beach can see the top of the tower as long as it is not more than Looking beyond the horizon An Over The Horizon radar employs completely different technology, compared with conventional radar installations that only provide " line-of-sight " coverage limited to a range of dozens or hundreds of kilometers at best. This makes its refractive index greater near the surface than at higher altitudes, which causes light that is travelling roughly horizontally to be refracted downward. Stillwell states. For example, for an observer with a height of 1.
